Dumbledore is actually an Old English word for "bumblebee." Rowling has said that she chose that name because she always thought of Dumbledore humming to himself.

The names of some of the main characters were changed from Rowling's original names. Before she changed them, they were: Hermione Puckle, Draco Spinks, Neville Puff, and Lily Moon (who ended up as Luna Lovegood).

Whenever you see Harry, Ron, and Hermione doing schoolwork in the movies, Daniel Radcliffe, Rupert Grint, and Emma Watson were actually doing their homework.

J.K. Rowling eventually revealed the fate of Dolores Umbridge, although we didn't read about it in the books: she was eventually imprisoned for her actions at the Ministry of Magic and was sent to Azkaban.

EDITORIAL

The Harry Potter universe has brought magic to millions of people. I was obsessed with it at a point too. I would wave sticks around trying to perform magic, and sometimes, in my mind, with a 'swish and flick' and a mumble of 'Wingardium Leviosa' I could make objects fly. Other times a simple incantation of 'Lumos' would light me up when I was sad. After all, as Dumbledore said, "Happiness can be found even in the darkest of times if only one remembers to turn on the light."

These books created magic in my life. I started looking at everything differently- a pencil became a wand, a pot became a cauldron and footballs became Quaffles. A smoothie turned into an Amortentia love potion, a sink into the entrance to the Chamber of Secrets, and any piece of paper into the Marauders Map. I was determined to prove that I was as smart as Hermione, as brave as Harry, and as loyal as Ron.

I have wished, more times than I can count, to use a time-turner and read the books for the first time all over again. The journey is unforgettable and has changed me a great deal. It is an important part of my life and even after reading those books at least thirty times, and never gets old. Each time, I discover a secret hidden within the sea of words, a glimmer of hope with each page, and a thrill at every new chapter.

Right now, the world is struggling due to the pandemic and even then, there is magic all around us. People have found a way to make do with this new normal. Technology has helped us cope immensely in this situation. We can see each other through the screens of our different devices. Classes are ongoing on various digital platforms. In these tough times, people are reconnecting and discovering each other all over again. Although our version of magic might not include wand-waving and potion-making, it is still wonderful. Today we take you on a journey through magic, in real life, and in books, both good and evil. As Professor Slughorn once said, "There can be no light without the dark."

Life isn't always like in fairy tales – it doesn't always start with 'Once upon a time' and it doesn't always have a happily ever after. What is important, is to look for those moments that stay with us forever, because, unlike in books, our stories never end, and as humanity battles on, it is these moments that carry us in the never-ending tale that is life. Moments that are filled with Magic...

South Korea faces 2nd wave of coronavirus-

Health officials in South Korea believe that the country is facing a second wave of the Coronavirus, despite a low number of recorded cases. Head of the Korea Centers for Disease Control (KCDC), Jung Eunbyeong, said the first wave lasted up until April. Since May, there have been out-breaks in nightclubs and other public places. The mayor of Seoul also warned that the capital may have to return to strict social distancing, should cases top 30 on average over the next three days and the bed occupancy rate of the city's hospitals exceeds 70%. A few days ago, officials reported that over the last 24 hours, 17 new infections had been recorded, from different clusters in large workplaces and warehouses. One might ask why the number of cases in a small country such as South Korea should matter so much? The reason is that South Korea was one of the first countries to face the outbreak and almost recover from it. The rate of average daily cases had dropped down to such a large extent, that it was recorded that there were no new cases for three consecutive cases. The country had set an example for other nations on how to deal with the virus. However, if there is indeed a second wave, not only South Korea, but other nations too need to be alarmed as the same scenario may take place in their country.

The Yemeni crisis-

As the world is going through a pandemic, Yemen, according to the United Nations, suffers from the largest humanitarian crisis of the current times. The United Nations secretary general, António Guterres even commented that 'Yemen is hanging on a thread' and that 'ending war is the only solution.' This crisis has its roots in the post Arab Spring Yemen, where failure to stabilise a new government, resulted in the rising of the Houthi rebels and foreign intervention. These factors, over the years, have completely destroyed Yemen. Currently, it is facing a crashing economy, with most of the population relying on the black market, the COVID 19 pandemic and a cholera outbreak, all at once. During this crucial moment, the UN is requesting everyone to try and donate to the UN- Yemen related funds and is trying to stop the war.

SOUTH KOREA FIGHTING 'SECOND WAVE' OF COVID-19

USA and CHINA-

The new coronavirus pandemic is changing and challenging literally everything. The China-U.S. relationship – arguably the most important bilateral relationship in history between the world’s biggest and most powerful countries – is no exception. American resentment toward China has increased dramatically, stoked by the explicit efforts by the Trump administration to pin the blame for all aspects of the pandemic on the PRC. They also accused China of withholding important information about the virus and not curbing it in the earlier stages. The Secretary of State Mike Pompeo has repeatedly criticised China by stating that the COVID -19 virus had been formed in a lab in Wuhan and that USA even had proof of the same. USA has also decided to cut ties with the World Health Organisation due to the support it had provided to China in the earlier stages of the pandemic. The G7 summit in which USA has categorically left out China has just increased tensions between China and USA as well as Russia and USA. This was to be a summit to discuss covid-19 and its impacts on global economies. The study, Trade and Trade Diversion Effects of United States Tariffs on China, shows that the ongoing US-China trade war has resulted in a sharp decline in bilateral trade, higher prices for consumers and trade diversion effects. This will not only affect global trade but also bilateral relations among other countries and also lead to increase in proxy wars.

INDIA - CHINA-

Recently border tensions between India and China have increased heavily in the Galwan Valley region near the India China Border. The clash on 17th June, fought in one of the most forbidding landscapes on the planet, was a startling culmination of months of mounting tension and years of dispute. That day, 20 Indian jawans died in during dispute and since then tensions have just raised. Narendra Modi India's prime minister has use discretion instead of showcasing power in this case against China. Many politicians and people disagree with him and feel that this is an act of weakness but some feel this is needed with the defence budget cut down. India instead retaliated by banning 20 Chinese apps including Tik Tok which has caused several mixed feelings in the country. Now other countries such as the USA and Pakistan are also getting involved in this tension and conflict. These tensions are not likely to end soon and may affect the already severed India-China relations in a bad way.

'ELEMENT' OF SURPRISE

To the wizarding and the muggle world, You are here to learn the subtle science and exact art of potion-making. I can teach you how to bottle fame, brew glory, even stopper death [The Potions Master, Harry Potter and the Philosopher's Stone]. Every day I come across dunderheads with letters from their families from all across the world. The COVID pandemic, which has not failed to interrupt the life of any wizard, has kept the world under its fingertips. Fortunately, the pandemic has not reached Hogwarts. After all, Hogwarts is the safest place. I am highly amused by the unproductive means by which people are spending their valuable time, except the Slytherins, of course.

Interestingly, I am also constantly encountering a view into the lives of muggles and the way they are dealing with the "COVID pandemic". For once, these muggles are working tirelessly in search of the perfect potion which they call a "vaccine" which overpowers this virus. From England all the way to Bangladesh and China in the far east, muggle potion makers, namely doctors and scientists are fighting to develop vaccines and drugs. Globally, 140 vaccines are underway, and most already in different stages of human trial. These muggle potion makers have categorized the 12 leading vaccines under 5 broad categories – Genetic Vaccines, which uses a gene of the coronavirus to provoke an immune response; Protein Vaccine, which uses a Coronavirus protein or a fragment of it for an immune response.

Repurposed Vaccine, which are modified versions of vaccines used for other purposes; Viral Vector Vaccine, which uses a virus to deliver coronavirus genes into the cells to trigger an immune response; and Whole Virus Vaccine, which uses an inactivated version of the virus to provoke an immune response. Since the Daily Prophet has predicted that 60 million people will be affected by the virus in a year, we had no choice but to approach this issue. Here, at Hogwarts, my fellow Slytherins and I are looking at a cure along with the prevention of the disease.

Inspired by the Repurposed Vaccine, we are modifying the classic Healing Potion. The dark atmosphere of the Potion Classroom in the dungeons is illuminated by several vials of luminescent liquids. Several students of the other houses are accompanying Pomona Sprout, our Herbology professor in finding natural remedies to boost our immune system. The unspeakable has become true- we are taking this opportunity to establish friendly relations with the Muggle world. During such times, cooperation with the authorities around us will ensure utmost safety.

TODAY'S SPECIALS

Butterbeer

Have you ever wondered what a butter beer tastes like? Or if you would ever be able to finish a Knickerbocker Glory on your own? Well not to worry! I am here to bring to you authentic recipes straight from the three broomsticks and kitchens of Hogwarts for you to try this quarantine!

Now, this recipe is something we have all wanted to try as children. This is a recipe commonly found in Harry Potter World and the Universal Studios. You guessed it... butter beer! For this delicious potion (not a potion, but still incredible nonetheless) you will need:

Ingredients

- 2 tsp. Butterscotch syrup or flavoring (you can use ice cream , (however the flavor might not be as strong)
- 1 glass of Cream soda/clear soda
- 1 scoop of Vanilla ice cream
- Whipped cream( optional)
- Ice (optional)

Procedure

- Scoop out 1 scoop of ice cream and add it to your glass
- Add a splash of butterscotch flavouring ( to taste: It is quite strong)
- Pour in your soda and give it a stir
- Add a swirl of whipped cream for extra flavor or ice.
- Serve cold and pair with a nice canary cream. Oh wait...oops! Maybe just leave the canary creams for Neville.

Mangerium Leviosa Wraps

This delectable recipe is a traditional and a centuries old recipe. I added my own magical twist to it and this special recipe is surely going to take you on an exhilarating journey to the enchanting and enigmatic world of Harry Potter.

Makes: 30

Ingredients

Crepe

- 1 cup all purpose flour
- 1 cup semolina (sooji)
- ½ cup rice flour
- 4 mangoes
- ½ cup sugar
- Clarified butter (ghee)
- 800ml Milk

Filling

- 300g of mewa
- 4 mangoes
- 1 cup sugar

Chocolate mint sauce:

- 300g Bittersweet chocolate
- 4 tbsp cream
- Mint leaves (for decoration)
- 4 drops Mint essence

Procedure

For crepe batter

- Strain mango pulp and make it lump-less
- Add all purpose flour, semolina, sugar, rice flour and the lump-less mango pulp in a bowl. Mix well with milk.
- The mixture has to be runny. Keep it aside for ½ an hour..

Filling

- Add mango pulp and strain it.
- Heat a pan and add mewa, lumpless mango pulp and sugar and stir continuously till it turns into a semi tight sticky paste
- To make the Mangerium Leviosa Wraps, heat a flat non stick pan and brush clarified butter on it.
- Then pour  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup of the batter on the heated pan with the help of a ladle.
- Then take one tbsp of the filling and roll it out. Place it on the centre of the wrap. Cover it from both sides.
- In this way, make all of them.
- For chocolate mint sauce:
  - Through double boiling method, melt the chocolate. Let it rest for a few minutes.
  - Then add mint essence and cream and whip it well.
  - For decoration, you can cut small pieces of mango chunks and garnish the chocolate mint sauce with mint leaves.
- Serve the Mangerium Leviosa Wraps hot/cold as per your choice.

LIVE, LAUGH AND LANGUAGE

The Magical Words of Harry Potter

J.K.Rowling's Magical World of Harry Potter has taken our muggle world by storm. The fictitious tale of the triumphant trio at Hogwarts School of Witchcraft and Wizardry is known by almost everyone around the globe, its characters have become household names and all of us have tried the magical spells ourselves at least once. But did you know that these spells have some not-so-magical roots? Here are 7 popular spells which originate from other languages:

Accio is the Summoning Charm; it can be used to bring an object to the spell-caster.

Riddikulus is a charm that is used in defence against a Boggart. It causes the creature to assume a form that is humorous to the caster, thereby counteracting Boggart's ability to terrorize. While this spell sounds very similar to the English word "ridiculous," it can also be a derivative of the Latin word "ridiculum," which means "laughable."

Lumos is a charm that illuminates the tip of the caster's wand, allowing the caster to see in the dark. The counter-charm for this spell is the Wand-Extinguishing Charm, Nox, which is used to extinguish the light from the caster's wand.

Avada Kedavra is a tool of the Dark Arts and one of the three Unforgivable Curses. When cast successfully on a living person or creature the curse causes instantaneous and painless death, without causing any injury to the body, and without any trace of violence. According to J. K. Rowling, its root is actually Aramaic and derives from the original word "abracadabra," which translates to "let the thing to be destroyed."

The Cruciatus Curse, also known as the Torture Curse, is a tool of the Dark Arts and one of the three Unforgivable Curses. It is one of the most powerful and sinister spells known to Wizardkind. When cast successfully the curse inflicts intense, excruciating pain on the victim. The Cruciatus curse means "I torture" in Latin.

Petrificus Totalus is a spell that freezes or petrifies the body of the victim, making it incapable of moving, except for the eyes and breathing. It is colloquially known as the Body-Bind Curse which has varying lengths of effectiveness depending on the skill or experience of the caster. This spell that physically petrifies or freezes your opponent is a mix of three words, with three different origins, "petros" meaning "rock or stone" in Greek, "facio" meaning "to make or to do," and "totalis," meaning "whole" in Medieval Latin.

Expecto Patronum casts a Patronus, which can appear as simply white vapour or as a silvery-white animal shape. This spell is used to ward off Dementors, the guardians of Azkaban. The Latin word "patronus" directly translates to "a protector." Expecto means "I look" or "I wait." Put them together, and you have "I wait for a protector."

Alternative Ending

As the sun began to set, Professor McGonagall sealed Hogwarts with various enchantments and the whole school prepared for the war which was to take place. Harry's scar started to burn and gave him blinding headaches. They had come.

Professor McGonagall had never felt more vulnerable. The war would decide Hogwarts's fate, and even more so, Harry's. Harry was a mere seventeen-year-old boy who had lost everything he loved, but two things that stuck with him was that ghastly scar and the title-'the boy who lived'. He didn't deserve this. No one did. He was pacing up and down the moving staircases, shaking his jet-black hair out of his emerald green eyes. His mother's eyes. He tried to think of her and his father, and how they were watching over him. As soon as he saw the dark obscures like mist, he knew it was time. Almost all the Horcruxes were destroyed leaving only three, one of which was... the diadem.

It was scary as it all happened so fast but there was no way out of this. Harry, Ron and Hermione raced against time to destroy the Horcruxes. As Harry destroyed the diadem, the barrier collapsed. The war had begun. It was a horrific sight. Spells were shot from all angles. There were bloodshed and people fiercely held on to their loved ones and survive.

People were screaming as death eaters swept upon them, malicious expressions in their cold, misanthropic eyes. People were broken up, friends were killed, siblings were torn apart. It was a heart-wrenching sight. Everyone was counting on Harry to save the wizarding world.

Meanwhile, Harry was engaged in a final duel with Voldemort. The pair faced off in front of all the survivors who had gathered in the great hall - wounded, mourning their loved ones, and moments away from death. Voldemort grinned maniacally at Harry and then sparked off red light from the Elder Wand. Harry deflected it and shot a spell at the dark lord Harry's scar gave him throbbing headaches like his head was about to split open. He tried to ward off the spells as long as he could, but he slowly started to lose his strength and was forced to reduce the intensity of his spells. Just as the Dark Lord was about to finish it once and for all, a blue spark hit his head, causing him to double over in pain.

Voldemort, shocked at whoever had shot this spell, spun around instantly, leaving Harry wounded and lying on the ground in a heap. He and his new opponent were now engaged in a battle to the death, determined to destroy their opponent. The fight was getting intense. They kept shooting spells at each other, each one getting more aggressive than the last. The spells instead of deflecting each other, grew stronger, intertwining like cords. In the meantime, Snape, who had managed to survive the war, was back at Hogwarts, locked in his office, brewing up a potion with the ingredients he managed to salvage from his cupboard. "This should be enough," he said as he crammed the potion into a vial. He rushed out to find a battle taking place between two opponents, while Harry was lying on the ground, his eyes closed and his breathing staggered.

"Arrrrgh!" an anger-filled snarl erupted from Voldemort's opponent as a flash of green light hit him, followed by a blast as the ground under the two opened up like a fissure. One got up, one didn't. From the fissure, a girl emerged, in ragged, grey clothes; her hair a mess; her face covered in cuts and grime, her arms and legs full of deep gashes. She looked exhausted as she staggered up to the crowd, her piercing green eyes fixated on Harry. She pushed her damp hair away from her face and shifted her gaze from Harry to Snape.

Harry still felt dizzy and could not focus on the figure which was standing in front of him. He closed his eyes and let out a sigh. Once he opened them, he found the figure sitting next to him. He could not control the words which were blurted out of his mouth, instead of thanking the girl for saving his life, the first question that came to his mind was who was she? Why was she here? Why did she save his life? How did she know that there was a war because clearly, she didn't study in Hogwarts and he had never seen her before?

All these questions made his head spin.

“As if understanding what was going on inside his head, the girl introduced herself as Scarlett. Harry looked at her and noticed that she had the same emerald green eyes. Harry averted his gaze and introduced himself. Before Harry could say anything else, Scarlett said in a feeble voice something that caught Harry off-guard. “I know you’re wondering who I am. My name, my full name, is Scarlett Evans. And you, Harry, are my half-brother.” Harry didn’t think he heard right. Harry turned towards Scarlett, “What...that is not even possible...how...you...” he could not complete any of his questions, he just stared at her in disbelief.” You...you can’t be serious”, Hermione said as she kept looking back and forth between Harry and the girl who claimed to be his sister. “I dunno mate, you both do look alike”, Ron looked at his best friend, his brain temporarily unable to form full sentences.

“Come on Harry, come with me”, Snape said as he led the siblings to his office, Ron and Hermione following closely behind. How did I never know that you even existed? Why did no one ever tell me about you? Why are you resurfacing now, after all this time? How did you know that I existed?”, before Harry could continue the interrogation, Scarlett interrupted him, “Slow down Harry! Well, we have an aunt on our mum’s side, Aunt Tina. She took care of me in Canada all these years. You were only a year old when we moved, it was right after Voldemort attacked our house. I was three. Dumbledore knew about me but he didn’t tell you as that would put me in danger. No one back home knows we’re related. Dumbledore kept me posted as he knew the time would come when I was needed. I’ve known about you my whole life. Getting separated from you was heart breaking. Dumbledore told me to come before he died. I received the letter but didn’t do anything till Snape told me to come.”, she finished now clutching the vial with her hands.

‘Snape? Why did Snape call her?’ it kept ringing in Harry’s head. “Who is your father?” Harry asked his final question. Scarlett glanced sideways with an anxious look in her eyes. What she said next shocked her audience.

“My father, Harry,
is Severus Snape.”

SPORTS COLUMN

“Don’t chase the quaffle if you see the snitch.”

Everyone loves some form of competition every once in a while, whether in the muggle world or the wizarding one. What better way to promote competition and motivation than a good old sport? In some respects, there are radical differences in the nature of athletic activities in the two worlds, however, some resemble each other too.

What better way to prove the similarities than to showcase them! Let’s start strong – quidditch and soccer. Extremely celebrated and competitive sports, these are the pride and joy of wizards and muggles respectively. As different as they might be, they do share some common grounds. How, you may ask? Well, stick around to find out!

1. The structure of the seekers, chasers and keepers resembles the basics of soccer:

a. The work of a seeker resembles that of a midfielder – chasing the ball (snitch or football) and helping their team in trying to win

b. The chasers pass the ball and aim at the hoops in hopes of scoring 10 points. This could be compared to strategically offensive positions in soccer such as forwards/strikers

c. On the other hand, a keeper to their 3 hoops is the equivalent to a goalkeeper to their goalpost.

2. In the case of soccer, the ‘bone of contention’ is some poor animals hide a.k.a, a football, while in quidditch the articles are bestowed with rudimentary survival instincts – bludgers try to kill you, the snitch is wicked fast and damn near impossible to see and the quaffle is as interesting as a half-eaten tuna sandwich.

3. In quidditch, the beater’s function is more of a defensive one – they disrupt and disturb the chaser and/or the seeker to prevent the scoring of points. So, they represent the essence of midfielder defence.

4. The idea behind acquiring the snitch is to end the game. Even though extremely rare, this parallel can be drawn with the concept of a Golden Goal.

5. Both the games start off with a ‘kick off’. While in soccer it symbolizes kicking off the football, in quidditch it indicates literally kicking off from the ground.

In other news, over 50% of our population is transforming into potatoes. This article is here to save the day. Here are some ways in which you can save yourself from the deadly virus now known as – the we’re-becoming-couch-potatoes-rona (scientific name: Potatoa couchas)

- Clean your room (please)
- Experiment with your wardrobe
- Pamper yourself with DIY masks and spas (pro tip: avoid cutting bangs)
- Keep a journal/blog
- Enrol onto free courses
- Take virtual world tours through the internet
- Keep in touch with your family and friends
- Take on DIY projects (make your own masks!)
- Learn a new skill (tip: want to know how to say 'quarantine stinks' in 6 other languages – learn it!)
- Set up a 15-30-minute workout routine (you need something to justify eating those chips!)
- Solve puzzles/brain teasers
- When binging on YouTube/Netflix throw in a documentary or two
- Get artistic (it's your time to make a mess...erm...art and blame it on this article)
- Volunteer – in every way possible

WARNING: “mischief managed”

Oliver Meher Wood

How to Clean Your Room

- 1 Always start with your bed. Make your bed and then put everything on your bed.
- 2 Laundry Put all clean clothes away and put your dirty ones in a basket or wherever they belong.
- 3 HOME Make sure everything left on your bed has a "home" and put it where it belongs. Put items without a home in the trash or send to Good Will.
- 4 Vacuum, Dust and CELEBRATE! Make sure and have something special in mind for when you are done to keep you motivated.
